On the occasion of the 70th anniversary of the adoption of the 1954 Hague Convention and its 1954 First Protocol as well as the 25th anniversary of the adoption of its 1999 Second Protocol

70 years after the adoption of the 1954 Hague Convention the implementation of cultural property protection (CPP) within armed forces and during armed conflict still leaves room for improvement. A further objective is to emphasize the significance of tangible and intangible heritage for societies and to elaborate on the added value of CPP for military missions and operations, education and training.
